1993 Mercedes-Benz 300SE W140

An extraordinary 22,600 kilometres from new

It is becoming increasingly difficult to find an early W140 Mercedes-Benz in genuinely outstanding condition — but to find a one-owner Sydney car with just 22,600 kilometres from new is something altogether different.

Finished in elegant Smoke Silver Metallic with Cream leather upholstery, this magnificent 1993 Mercedes-Benz 300SE presents in a condition that has to be seen to be fully appreciated.

The car has had just one owner from new in Sydney and has been exceptionally carefully preserved throughout its life. It was never routinely parked outside, and this level of care is evident everywhere you look.

The paintwork presents beautifully, the Cream leather interior is superb, and perhaps most tellingly, the original timber veneer remains remarkably fresh and lustrous, without the deterioration so often found in W140s of this age.

The switchgear, carpets, headlining, trim and fittings all reflect the extraordinarily low mileage.

Even more importantly, everything works as it should.

The previous owner was advised by the Service Manager at McIntosh of Mosman that this was the most perfect second-hand Mercedes-Benz he had seen — an extraordinary compliment and one that gives some indication of just how special this car is.

The W140 – Mercedes-Benz at its peak

Introduced at enormous cost, the W140 S-Class represented an era when Mercedes-Benz engineering was pursued with seemingly little regard for expense. The doors close with the bank-vault solidity for which these cars became famous, while the quality of the materials, ride comfort, refinement and engineering remain impressive more than three decades later.

This Australian-delivered 300SE is powered by Mercedes-Benz's wonderfully smooth 3.2-litre six-cylinder engine, coupled to a four-speed automatic transmission. It delivers exactly the sort of effortless, quiet and dignified performance expected of an S-Class.

Features include the luxury appointments expected of Mercedes-Benz's flagship saloon of the period, including Cream leather upholstery, extensive genuine timber trim, electrically operated seating, climate control, electric windows and mirrors, central locking, cruise control and alloy wheels, together with the W140's extensive comfort and safety engineering.

But the specification is almost secondary here.

The real story is the mileage and condition.

With only 22,600 kilometres travelled in approximately 33 years, this represents an average of fewer than 700 kilometres per year.

W140s are increasingly being recognised as one of the great Mercedes-Benz models, but exceptional examples are becoming very difficult to find. Most surviving cars have travelled substantial mileages, and genuinely original, carefully preserved cars are now attracting increasing interest from collectors and marque enthusiasts.

For someone looking for an inexpensive W140 there will always be alternatives.

For someone looking for one of the finest, lowest-mileage and most beautifully preserved examples available, this car deserves serious consideration.
